

WELL COLLEGE TEAM MODEL

LIAISON

The term Liaison means “one who facilitates a close working relationship between people or organizations.” For our purposes, simply put, Well College Liaisons are connectors.

Liaisons are outward-facing, constantly looking to invite new students they encounter at church or on campus into The Well’s community, whether to CG’s or other Well College events. They are sensitive to new student faces at church and are eager to invite them into the Well College community.

Their primary responsibilities include being a faithful covenant member of The Well and inviting at least one non-believer to every Well College event they attend.

LEARNER

Learners are students that serve as faithful Well College Liaisons but are passionate about learning how to reach lost students on campus. Learners are excited to grow in relational evangelism. They want to learn how to identify their mission field at UT and share their faith.

Learners meet weekly with other Learners in a discipleship group or d-group. Learners also help assist Laborers with planning & executing different Well College events. Learners show potential for being strong leaders.

They are faithful, meaning they will follow through on the actions they commit to doing. They are available, meaning they have time within their schedules to commit to being more involved in Well College. They are growing spiritually, and they are teachable.

LABORER

Laborers are Well College Learners that have enough experience as learners to feel confident leading their D-groups. Laborers have more responsibility in that they lead the planning & execution of Well College events such as student-led Well College Nights, but the time commitment is more or less the same as a learner. Learners & Laborers are the hands and feet of Well College ministry.

Laborers attend weekly check-in via zoom with the college director. They come up with ideas for Well College outreach events & service projects, and they inform the College Director of what resources they need to pull it off. Laborers/Learners attend a once-a-month laborers dinner where they eat & celebrate wins in their ministries for the month. Laborers/Learners coordinate a Well College service project once a month.
